

REUNION—Kenneth Warren and Ray Lawler, as buddies, are back home with their girls, June Jago and Madge Ryan. They have been going away to work each year for seventeen years; they always return with dolls for the girls. This is the summer of the seventeenth doll.

Play From Australia

Broadway, unfamiliar with Australia and its drama, will receive on Jan. 22 a play that created a great stir there two years ago, and last year in London. It is "The Summer of the Seventeenth Doll," by a native playwright, Ray Lawler, who also acts in it. It concerns a pair of migrant agricultural workers and their girls who wait for them to return home to Melbourne each year after seven months away in the sugar cane fields.

REACTION—But this reunion turns out less happily than the others. Everyone is older, less gay—and, for the first time, the two men fight. Here, Miss Jago restrains Warren, who has knocked Lawler down.
